
Imani Belton '20

A native of Greenville, South Carolina, Imani is a first-generation college graduate. She is a 2020 graduate of Winthrop and holds a Bachelor of Science in integrated marketing communication. During her time at Winthrop, Imani was actively involved as a student, serving as a Peer Mentor, being part of the inaugural class of the Diversity Peer Educator program, and serving as chair of the Council of Student Leaders and student body president.

After completing her undergraduate degree, Imani moved to Bloomington, Indiana, to pursue her master's degree at Indiana University - Bloomington. While in Indiana, she and her classmates hosted the School of Education's inaugural First Generation College Student and Graduate Week. The event had a profound impact and inspired other offices like the Office of First Year Experience to be more intentional about their practices. In May 2022, she successfully completed her M.Ed. in higher education and student affairs. Her experiences at Winthrop had a significant impact on the work she does inside and outside of higher education.

Imani currently resides in Durham with her beloved dog, Nola. She currently serves as the assistant director of student conduct at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, where she is highly respected and valued for her expertise and dedication to students. When not working, she enjoys traveling, trying new foods and staying active.
