The next staff conference will be Tuesday, Oct. 16, in Dina’s place.
Why are the answers to the questions never put on the web page? Always a question, never an answer. It’s not that hard to do.
A: They’re right – it’s not hard to do, because we are already doing it. The answers are in the meeting minutes on the Staff Conference website. They’re not on the screen during the meetings because the answers are live, which means we don’t know in advance. However, I will begin adding the answers to the presentation for when it’s posted after the meeting.
Is there a possibility of a raise for state employees in this fiscal year or next?
A: It’s too early to tell at this time what the state will do. Raises tend to come in election years, hah, but it’s just too early to tell at this time.
Do we foresee or project any budget cuts to departments or furloughs for employees in the coming months?
Q: They are looking at the budget, but furloughs are considered a very last measure and are not on the table. President Mahony noted that the only time the word ‘furloughs’ came up was in relation to answering this question.
The Student Payroll Adjustment form (used when a student misses the deadline to enter their time online via Wingspan) requires three signatures. Level 1: supervisor; Level 2: dean/department head; and Level 3: vice president; and then the provost. Is this an effective use of time for someone at that level? Perhaps Level 2 should be chair/department head, and Level 3 dean.
Q: This will be answered at the next meeting.
Banner 9 is an absolute joke that is slow, cumbersome, and NOT user-friendly. What is being done to either replace the horrible system or substantially improve the software so the speed and ease of Banner 8 is reflected in Banner 9?
A: Patrice Bruneau said the upgrade to Banner 9 was necessary as Banner 8 will no longer be supported by Elucian on Dec. 1. It’s too costly to change systems entirely. Banner 9 has increased management and security, which is necessary to maintain, so: no. It was agreed that there could be some TLC sessions for staff to learn how to navigate the new Banner more easily.
Would the university consider turning on the A/C earlier in the mornings for the custodial staff, as well as the heat in winter? There are several elderly custodial staff members who struggle with the temperature in the buildings when they arrive at 4 a.m. to clean. They’ve been working in very hot conditions, and health is a big concern. Also, when a staff member in this division is off or out for a period of time, there are no replacements sent in their stead to help with their duties, which leaves the remaining staff to work extra hard and in hot temperatures. The morale has been down recently due to this, and it has been noticed by many how seemingly unfair it is.
A: It just isn’t cost-effective to have the buildings running at different times than those at which they’re currently set. To have the building temperatures be at the optimum level, they’d actually have to start heating/cooling hours earlier than work times. The university does have max/min temperature set points, and the system will automatically kick on if the temperatures fall outside of those zones. The university has staff who work as floaters and fill in when necessary. It’s rare to be fully staffed, and sometimes more people are out than they have floaters for, so there are gaps. During that time, employees are asked to fill in on the more critical areas instead.
